Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Shakespeare s Handwriting: Greenwood, (Sir) Granville George Shakespeare s Handwriting Everybody knows the saying, attributed to a certain judge of the mid-Victorian period, to the effect that the unvarnished might be divided into liars, damned liars, and expert witnesses. This was, of course, a saying more jocular than judicial, but, like many another exaggerated statement, it has, nevertheless, a substratum of truth. To illustrate, for example, the untrustworthiness of expert witnesses, I need only refer to a case which was tried at the Law Courts while I was practising at the Bar. At that time the two great experts whose services were constantly requisitioned in cases of disputed handwriting, were Messrs. Inglis Netherclift, and, in the particular case referred to, one of these great men was engaged on behalf of the plaintiff and the other on behalf of the defendant. The trial took place before a Judge and Jury, when the two handwriting experts went into the box in support of their respective clients, and each, with equal positiveness, pledged his reputation in support of diametrically opposite opinions; whereupon the Judge directed the Jury that they should leave the expert evidence altogether out of consideration. What are we to say then, when we find experts in high places - none other than the paleographers and graphonomists of the present day - differing widely among themselves? Are we to follow the example of the Judge and put the expert evidence altogether out of our consideration? That can hardly be done where the subject-matter for examination is one of such great literary importance as that of Shakespeare s handwriting, and yet it is clear, when there is...
