Excerpt: . . . 2. 2 Conduct Statistically Based Baseline Inspections Once the facilities to be targeted by ERP have been samples of facilities that may not be representative, identified, a state will randomly select a sample of those leaving agencies with greater uncertainty about overall facilities. Next, inspectors assess performance at each of sector group performance. (Sections 2. 6 and 2. 7 discuss these facilities using detailed checklists. Using the data the role of statistics in ERP in greater detail.) from these inspections, states can accurately estimate the sector groups performance level before the beginning To date, the number of baseline inspections conducted of compliance assistance and certification. For instance, by states ranges from 35 to more than 250, with most agencies typically calculate the percentage of facilities states conducting 35 to 50 site visits. The precise number achieving key compliance and pollution prevention of visits depends on how the state chooses to balance practices. This information can help agencies identify the resources available for site visits with the need for problem areas to highlight during compliance assistance, increased confidence in the results - because doing more and serve as a baseline for understanding whether sector inspections means having greater certainty in the results. group performance changes over time. ERPs random sampling approach is intended to help ensure that the set of facilities visited is representative of the overall sector or group being targeted. This random sampling provides agencies with the foundation for statistically calculating how confident they can be that the findings from these inspections shed light on overall sector group performance. By contrast, many other policy and measurement approaches collect data from 2. 3 Provide Plain-Language...
