Not illustrated. 1916 Excerpt: .somewhat similar table from the same source (i.e., Gotha Lebensversicherungsbank) but quoted by Prinzing (Handbuch der Medizinischen Statistik, Jena, Fischer, 1906) it appears probable that the figures are based on expected and actual number of deaths in various age groups). Considered in conjunction with facts regarding the prevalence of syphilis which have just come to hand, the figures just cited give one an insight into the tremendous influence of syphilis on the public health in general, and on the mortality from diseases of the heart, kidney and arteries in particular. The considerations to which I refer are as follows: Serologists, clinicians and syphilographers are agreed that the proportion of individuals giving a positive Wassermann reaction may safely be regarded as the minimum of infected persons in the community, for while now and then a positive reaction may occur in a non-syphilitic individual, the source of error...
